Monthly commentary - Review of July 2024

Our market summary

Global equities markets were broadly flat in July, but it was a month of two halves, with the first half seeing a succession of record highs. Fixed income also rallied as speculation mounted that the US Federal Reserve (the Fed) will cut interest rates in September, particularly after positive US inflation data was released. However, equities began to turn halfway through the month, and growth stocks were particularly weak, falling by 2.5%, as investors grew more sceptical about the potential for future returns from investment in artificial intelligence (AI). At the same time, investors became more optimistic about prospects for interest-rate sensitive small-cap companies.

Equity markets

US earnings season continued with four of the magnificent seven reporting results. Investors appeared underwhelmed by the releases and the tech sector came under pressure before a rebound into month end. Growing expectations for interest rate cuts and Trump moving ahead in the polls saw smaller companies perform better. In US dollar terms, US equities were up 1.3%, but the currency strength of the pound resulted in a loss of 0.3% for sterling investors.

European equities lagged their US and UK counterparts in July and returned 0.6% in euro terms. However, the strength of the pound again saw broadly flat returns for sterling investors. Disappointing economic data that indicated a slight calming of eurozone economic growth over the summer and uncertainties around the French election likely contributed to the weakness.

UK equities were up 3.2% over the month. Robust service sector (e.g. hotels, restaurants, transport) data in July and stronger than expected economic growth for the second quarter pointed to improving economic momentum. The landslide Labour victory in the election did not materially impact UK markets as a Labour victory had already been assumed. However, with political instability in Europe and the US, investors welcomed the clear result.

Emerging markets fell by 1.2% in July as they were dragged down by Chinese equities that saw losses of 2.8% over the month. The continued challenges in the real estate sector and the spillover effects on the broader economy contributed to these losses. In July, the Chinese authorities implemented various measures to provide liquidity support to the financial system with the aim to stimulate lending and support economic growth.

Fixed income

Heightened investor expectations for further central bank interest rate cuts in 2024 and 2025 saw fixed income markets deliver positive returns over the month with sterling corporate bonds and global bonds both returning 1.9%. UK gilts and US Treasuries were also both up over the quarter with returns of 1.9% and 2.2%, respectively.

Performance review

The Monthly Income Portfolios both delivered positive returns of 1.8% in July. Both portfolios were comfortably ahead of their Investment Association (IA) performance comparators.

Softer inflation in the US spurred expectations of interest rate cuts. This helped market performance broaden with smaller companies and other interest-rate sensitive asset classes outperforming. Strong performance from UK equities and weakness in growth stocks also aided relative returns.

Investment outlook

The end of July and the start of August saw volatility return to stock markets with bond yields and equity markets falling. Below we explore some of the underlying causes of the recent market wobbles along with some thoughts on possible future developments.

1. What caused the wobble?

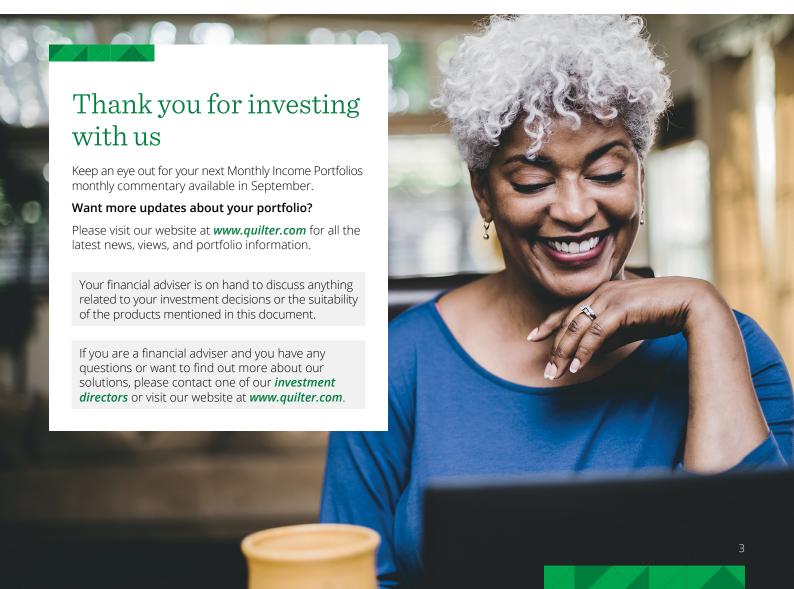

While recent corporate earnings results in the US have generally been ok, weaker than expected results from some major tech companies led to falls in share prices. Elsewhere, a strengthening yen saw international investors rush to exit the Japanese market. These events were compounded by a handful of weaker US economic data releases that led to concerns that the economy is losing momentum faster than previously thought.

2. When will the Fed cut rates?

Bond market pricing suggests the Fed will cut interest rates in September after they opted to stay on hold in July. However, there has been some concern that these cuts may come too late as the lagged effects of the higher interest rates regime are starting to show. If rates are cut gradually due to falling inflation, this should provide a tailwind for equities, but cutting rapidly due to weak economic growth is unlikely to be so well received.

3. What sort of landing can we expect?

Trends in economic data have indicated a cooling of the US economy for some time. It is difficult to tell whether this is just normalisation or the start of something worse. At this point, our base case is still for a soft landing but we continue to monitor changes in the data closely and stay alert to any further developments.

Important information

Past performance is not a guide to future performance and may not be repeated. Future forecasts are not a reliable guide to future performance and may not be achieved. Investment involves risk. The value of investments may go down as well as up and investors may not get back the amount originally invested.

There are also other risks shown below of which investors should be aware. For more information on these risks, investors should read the key investor information document(s) (KIID(s)).

The portfolio is denominated in one currency, but may hold assets denominated in other currencies, which means exchange rate changes may cause the value of investments to rise or fall. The portfolio may invest in a range of assets such as bonds, equities (company shares), and other investment funds. This means the portfolio will be subject to the collective risks of those investments and, in the case of other investment funds, the collective risks of those investment funds as well as their underlying investments. The portfolio deducts the charges from the income of the portfolio, which means there is the potential for capital erosion if insufficient income is achieved to cover the charges. The portfolio may use derivatives, which means there may be a higher level of risk. The portfolio may hold investments that may be more difficult to sell, which may affect the ability of investors to withdraw their money. The portfolio invests in emerging markets, which may be more volatile than investments in developed markets. The portfolio is likely to favour value stocks (as they typically provide higher dividend payments), which may be subject to periods of underperformance, as value and growth stocks typically outperform each other, and markets generally, at different times.
