Monthly commentary – Review of November 2024

Our market summary

The US election result was the main driver of market performance in November. Donald Trump regained the presidency, and the Republicans retained the Senate and won the House of Representatives. This clean sweep could make it easier for Trump to implement his campaign promises that include tax cuts, trade tariffs, and the deportation of illegal migrants.

Against this backdrop, global equities were up 5.0% in November. However, there remains a high degree of uncertainty about US domestic and foreign policy, and what the policy responses of other countries will be.

In order to aid your understanding, the underlined terms are hyperlinked to definitions in our online investment glossary.

Equity markets

US equities significantly outperformed all other regions, returning 7.5% in November, buoyed by expectations that Trump's domestic policy will cut taxes and regulation. It was these expectations for de-regulation that boosted US financials and the energy sector, while the industrials sector was seen as one of the main beneficiaries from tax cuts and trade policy. The weakest sectors in the month included healthcare and materials.

European equities were down 1.4% over the month with concerns about US trade policy and earnings warnings from the automotive and consumer goods sectors weighing on sentiment. The IT and communication services sectors were among the top gainers while materials and consumer staples suffered some of the steepest declines. There was also political uncertainty as the German government collapsed and then the French government followed in December.

UK equities were up 2.4% in November. Strong performance from financials and domestically focused companies helped to recoup some of the losses suffered in the immediate wake of the October Budget. Sterling also weakened 1.1% against the dollar which boosted companies with significant US exposure. However, economic headwinds increased as GDP growth in Q3 2024 was reported to have slowed to 0.1% from 0.5% in Q2 2024.

Overall, emerging markets equities were down by 2.5% in November as they weakened in the face of a strengthening dollar and investor concerns about the impact of Trump's intended tariffs. The latter weighed particularly heavy on China, which was down 3.3%. Elsewhere, some of the smallest emerging markets, such as the Philippines and Indonesia, saw the biggest losses, whilst the European markets of Czech Republic, Hungary, and Turkey were the top performers.

Fixed income

Fixed income markets ended the month on a positive note, despite earlier volatility surrounding the US elections. Global bonds were up 1.2% and global corporate bonds returned 1.4%. In the UK, gilts rallied and ended the month up 1.8%, whilst US Treasuries were up 0.8%. Meanwhile, central banks continued to lower rates during November with both the US Federal Reserve (Fed) and the Bank of England cutting interest rates by 0.25%.

Performance review

In November, the performance of the Cirilium Portfolios ranged from 1.0% for the lowest risk Conservative portfolio up to 3.4% for the highest risk Adventurous portfolio.

Our equity holdings were the primary driver of positive returns, with the strongest performance coming from the US as both growth and value holdings delivered. President-elect Trump's 'America First' policies should be beneficial for domestic companies, but import tariffs will likely be negative for export orientated economies such as Europe. Our European holdings lost ground as a result. Meanwhile, bonds performed better than many expected as yields had already risen over the preceding month in anticipation of a Trump victory.

Portfolio activity

We introduced an overweight to US equities, implemented via S&P 500 Equal Weight futures. All 500 companies in the index are weighted evenly (0.2% each), as opposed to being weighted by the size of the company. This tilts the portfolios away from the mega cap tech companies towards smaller (although still large cap) companies in the industrial and financial sectors.

We also introduced an underweight to European equities as the region's current economic malaise is poised to get worse under more protectionist US trade policies. Meanwhile, we removed our existing long US Treasury vs short European government bond position. This was designed to pay off in a market panic, but we became concerned about the position's payoff in our most likely scenario. Separately, we added a new UK equity holding, the Invesco UK Opportunities Fund, a large cap manager with a value tilt.

Investment outlook

It's been another good year for equity markets as the US economy has defied predictions of recession. Despite generally weaker economic data, particularly from the manufacturing sector, growth has remained above historic trend rates, and the labour market is showing only tentative signs of weakness. Meanwhile, inflation appears to be under control, which has given central banks the green light to begin reducing interest rates.

1. What happens next?

It is welcome news that central banks have pivoted to supporting growth rather than fighting inflation. However, bond markets have dialled back expectations for interest rate cuts partly due to worries over the potential for higher inflation under a Trump presidency. Now he has won the race, deregulation and his America First' stance is suggestive of US equity outperformance versus the rest of the world, higher bond yields, and a stronger US dollar.

2. How are we positioned?

Trump could be positive or negative for growth, but we lean towards him being positive for risk assets. Consequently, we remain overweight to risk assets through a position in high-yield bonds. The giveaways from the US and UK governments may put further upward pressure on bond yields and limit the number of cuts central banks can deliver, but following the pre-election bond selloff we are happy to keep our neutral positioning to government bonds.

3. What if we are wrong?

If inflation rebounds and fewer interest rate cuts are delivered, or we even see some hikes later in 2025, our alternatives diversifiers should help us to navigate trickier markets. A fall in growth could be a problem given our overweight to risk assets, but corporate balance sheets remain strong, so we think high-yield bonds would perform better than in past recessions. We remain vigilant for signs of a slowdown and are ready to act as required.

Important information

Past performance is not a guide to future performance and may not be repeated. Investment involves risk. The value of investments may go down as well as up and investors may not get back the amount originally invested.

There are also other risks shown below of which investors should be aware. For more information on these risks, investors should read the key investor information document(s) (KIID(s)).

The portfolios are denominated in one currency, but may hold assets denominated in other currencies, which means exchange rate changes may cause the value of investments to rise or fall. The portfolios may invest in a range of assets such as bonds, equities (company shares), and other investment funds. This means the portfolios will be subject to the collective risks of those investments and, in the case of other investment funds, the collective risks of those investment funds as well as their underlying investments. The portfolios deduct the charges from the capital of the portfolios, which means there is the potential for capital erosion if insufficient capital growth achieved to cover the charges. The portfolios may use derivatives, which means there may be a higher level of risk. The portfolios may invest more than 15% in cash, which could reduce returns in rising markets and reduce losses in falling markets. The portfolios may hold investments that may be more difficult to sell, which may affect the ability of investors to withdraw their money. The portfolios invest in emerging markets, which may be more volatile than investments in developed markets.
